Markets were higher in morning trading as new Labor Department numbers showed that nonfarm payrolls increased by 531,000 for the month of

It's all good, at least insofar as the stock market is concerned. The major indexes again ended the week at records amid continued good news on the economy and Covid-19, along with no surprises from the Federal Reserve and no bad effects from the shock waves of Tuesday's off-off-year election results. All of which fits the definition of a bull market.
