Stocks Drop After Weak July Jobs Report. We've Been Here Before.

By Connor Smith

The Dow was sliding in Friday trading after a weaker-than-expected July jobs report sent Wall Street scrambling and bets on a September rate cut flying. Sound familiar?

Anyone who paid attention to markets last year will remember the August 2024 selloff, which was sparked by that year's July jobs report.

While last year's report ultimately made the case for the Federal Reserve to cut interest rates by a half-point in September, the economy held steady and stocks eventually rebounded to fresh highs in the ensuing months.
